SPAFFORD & COLE,

RHINELANDER,

WIS.

Dr. Hlaman is on the sick list.

L. J. Billings was in Rhinelander over Sunday.

Go to Lewis Hdw. Co. for skates. Price the lowest.

J. A. Steele, of Arbor Vitae, was in Rhinelander Monday.

R. Stewart, of Eagle River, was in the city Monday.

J. B. Russell, of Appleton, spent Sunday in Rhinelander.

Alt-tight heaters at lowest prices in the city at Lewis Hdw. Co's.

The Minstrel entertainment will probably be held at the end of January.

The Men's Club will give a Ladies Night in January. An interesting program is being prepared.

Charles Hlaman, who does out supplies for the Langley & Alderson camps, was in the city Monday.

Mrs. Chas. Rogers returned from Wausau Saturday, where she had been for nearly two months with her mother.

Beginning Monday, Dec. 13, Gray will give 1000 School Bags to the children of Rhinelander as a little Christmas remembrance.

Geo. Deale, of Woodhorn, was in Rhinelander Saturday. He made the New North his annual call, and made the printer happy.

Beginning Monday, Dec. 13, Gray will give 1000 School Bags to the children of Rhinelander as a little Christmas remembrance.

Mr. Frank Davis, of State Line, was in Rhinelander last week, and remembered the New North office in a substantial way. Mr. Davis is with R. Otto, who is putting in about 900,000 feet of logs at his camp near State Line.

Stop in at Hildebrand's before you complete your Christmas purchases, and see what he has to offer in the way of acceptable gifts. It will surprise you to see how far a dollar will go. He has a full stock of up-to-date goods in his line and invites inspection.

The new bridge across the Pelican river which was recently ordered built by the officials of the city and Town of Pelican, was completed last week and accepted. B. F. Smith had the contract and superintended the work of construction. The bridge cost $200 and reflects credit on Mr. Smith's ability in the bridge building line.

Ed. Rogers & Co. made up a number of sets of logging sleighs during the summer. They did not expect to sell them all this winter and had not thought of having to work on a new lot as early as this, but they were obliged to and are now building several sets for immediate delivery. Ed. wants somebody to come and talk hard times to him.

Next Wednesday, Dec. 15, all of the lands known as the State Park Lands will be offered for sale at the court house in this city. They will be sold by single government description of lot or tract to the highest bidder over the value set by the commissioners. The sale will commence at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 15th, and will continue until all of the lands have been offered.

The entertainment given by Alexander Hall and his company at the Grand Opera House Friday evening was a pleasant and entertaining event. The audience which greeted them was a good sized one, and when Mr. Hall was introduced by Mayor Brennan he was greeted with loud applause. The numbers were all well received, the dictionary efforts of Miss Ackerson being especially pleasing.

Engineer Thos. Malady, the "Bold Eagle Eye" of the switch engine in the North-Western yards, wore a look on his face Tuesday which indicated that he was feeling bad. When asked about it Tom said he was feeling well physically, but that he felt a bit out of sorts owing to the fact that he was obliged to turn a crippled engine and one new to him at that. The work had become too heavy for the light engine which has been doing the switching here the past summer and one of the ore engines from the iron range had been sent down. It proved to be in poor shape and Tom didn't like it.

Harry Ashton took his trout out to Charles Preme's farm last week and placed them in a spring which does not freeze in the winter. He did it to save the trout and figured that he could go out and get them with a net any time he wanted to. He had an opportunity to sell his tank to Fred. Coon not long after placing them in the spring and went out with the net to bring them back. He returned alone. He jabbed all around the spring for the trout but failed to bring up anything but mud. He didn't even see a sign of his former pets. Harry wants to buy some now and any person having three or four will find a ready market at the Western Union telegraph office.

Buy furniture for holiday presents. Purchase gifts that may be appreciated after Christmas has gone by. Here are a few items: Rocking chairs from 40 cents to $5.00; bedroom suites from $12.00 to $20.00; fancy parlor pieces from $2.50 up to $15.00; center tables from $1.00 up; Pastel and water color portraits and etchings from $1.25 to $2.50.

F. A. Hildebrand.

W. H. Pool came up from Antigo for a short stay last week.

The Cash Department Store is the Klondyke for Holiday goods.

Boys' pure wool sweaters, all sizes, at the Cash Department Store.

Hon. D. A. Jennings, of New London, was a Rhinelander visitor Friday.

E. R. LeFevre, of Tomahawk Lake, was in the city last week on business.

Mart. Hirtel and wife, of Eagle River, were Rhinelander visitors last Friday.

D. S. Johnson came down from Woodhorn Monday for a short visit with his friends.

Klondyke for gold—Cash Department Store for Christmas goods, underwear and rubbers.

Men's wool lined mittens—the everywhere 75 cent value for 45 cents at the Cash Department Store.

H. B. Horton, of Des Moines, Ia., was in this city Monday, in the interests of the Chamberlain Remedy Company.

Mrs. T. B. Cowles, of Medford, was showing a fine line of real lace to the ladies of Rhinelander Friday and Saturday.

Chas. Thurston is taking a vacation from his labors, as a result of a tree falling on his left foot, crippling him up for a time.

Mrs. Duffy, accompanied by the Misses Harkins and McPhee, were down from Tomahawk Lake on a shopping trip Saturday.

M. E. Monsell spent Sunday with his family. He has been employed for several weeks by the Ross Lumber Co., at Arbor Vitae, doing a big job of surveying.

Mrs. Farley, accompanied by her sister-in-law, Miss Farley, both of Menomonie, were in Rhinelander last week, making the rounds of our dry goods establishments.

You have time now to sit for a photograph before Christmas time. Call at Krueger & Co.'s gallery and see samples of their work. Prices low and satisfaction guaranteed.

A. M. Miller and son Louis made several trips from Dudley this week with loads of beef for the merchants here. They have a good market here and dispose of all the meat they raise.

John R. Binder arrived in the city last week after a business trip of several weeks in Melton, on the Central line. He has opened a jewelry store there and is doing a thriving business.

Send your friend a photograph of yourself for Christmas. It is the best kind of a present and is sure to be appreciated. Call at Krueger & Co.'s gallery and have them fix you out. They take the finest photos in the state.

State Superintendent J. Q. Emery has notified Supt. Mason that the Superintendents' Convention for Northern Wisconsin will meet in Rhinelander, Jan. 7, 1898. This is the first time a state officer has ever called a convention of any kind in Rhinelander. A number of Superintendents are expected from the northern part of the state, and some from the western portion.

The contract for furnishing the county with one hundred and fifty cords of green wood was awarded to John Hess, his being the lowest bid. He furnishes this wood at $2.47 per cord. Mr. W. W. Fenelon's bid was the next lowest, being $2.48. Mr. Fenelon received the contract to furnish fifty cords of dry wood at $2.21 per cord. There was no other bid in to furnish the dry wood.

Mr. J. McDonald, of Lac du Flambeau, foreman for the Lac du Flambeau Lumber Co., was in town Monday. He informed us that this company will put in about 25,000,000 this winter. They are running three camps themselves, and have let contracts to jobbers who will operate six other camps. Mr. McDonald says they have just been getting out some fine timber to be shipped to Madison for timber work. The pieces were 10x10, sixty-two feet long, and there were not enough knots in them to be noticed. Such timber is hard to find.

On Saturday evening Horace E. Edgell and Miss Lucy M. Ulrich were united in marriage by Rev. Geo. H. Kemp, of the First Congregational church. The ceremony took place at the residence of Mrs. John A. McKee, sister of the bride. The contracting parties were residents of Eau Claire. Mr. Edgell is a well known locomotive engineer and Miss Ulrich has also a large circle of friends. The best wishes of their friends are extended to the happy couple. After a short visit in Rhinelander they will make their future home in Eau Claire.

Christmas is coming, and our people are already thinking of presents for their friends. It is an easy matter to select a present when there are large and complete stocks to select from. A glance at the advertising columns of the New North will tell you where to go to find what you want. Our live merchants let you know what they have, and invite you to come and see them. Don't fail to read the ads. each week, as there is something new there every time.

Men's 40 cent wool mittens for 25 cents at the Cash Department Store.

HOLIDAY GOODS!

We have our Holiday Goods placed and ready for your inspection. It would not be a bad plan for you to make your selection now while we have all the choice things. Some have done so already. You can pick out what you want, and we will pack and mark them to you, and you can get them when you wish, or we will deliver to you at any time.

OUR RING CUPS

are metal bound. Some of them have covers. All are guaranteed not to tarnish and are as good as though they were solid gold. They sell at 25c.

TRAYS & CUPS

We have the larger Trays and Cups. Some have fancy glass bases with grill work covers and bands and some are all metal. They are all beautiful and remarkably cheap for high class goods. Prices are like this: 25c, 50c, 75c, 95c, $1.50.

"I forgot," he said, "that you have not yet told me, but I already knew."

"You knew that I had written you?" I asked in astonishment.

"Yes," he replied, and then he told me exactly what I had written. I asked him how he did it, but he made no reply.

"I have heard that East Indians are able to do such things," remarked Lampkin. "I am awfully glad I met him. I want to get at the truth about some of the things that I have heard of his people."

"He could lay your hypnotism in the shade," jested the detective. "He told me he could convince a whole room full of people that he had cut off his own head."

"I don't doubt it," replied the doctor. "What did he say to the Denton party?"

"Oh, he gave them some song and dance about having received some message from the stars. He'll then persuade them, through fair means or hypnotism, to come to his house on Twentieth street. He has a queer place there. He must have money. I think he owns the house. It is one of the old residences. It had been closed for ten years before he took it."

"Ah, a light breaks in on me!" cried Lampkin. "You are going to hold some sort of séance."

"Yes, a séance that is a séance," laughed Hendricks. "I would be more explicit, but I want you to see it from the standpoint of an outsider. Are you proof against hypnotism?"

"I think so."

"Well, only be sure that what you behold is not imagination," said the detective, with a knowing laugh.

CHAPTER XV.

Kola's residence was a three storied house. It was very old styled in appearance and was the only building in the block which stood back from the street. It had a garden in front protected by a massive iron fence 20 feet in height.

Hendricks unlocked a side gate, went to the door and rapped with the old fashioned knocker. Lampkin had noticed from the garden that there were no lights in any of the windows, and when the door opened on its creaking hinges the absolute darkness within was an additional surprise.

"Hello! Here we are!" said Hendricks, addressing some one behind the door. "Stand here and wait for Mr. Kola. He's behind with the party. Come on, doctor." Hendricks caught the arm of his friend and drew him down what seemed to be a dark hall. As they moved along Lampkin heard the massive door close with a little puff of escaping air, and then, as all sound from the outside was instantly excluded, he knew that the doors and windows had been purposely padded.

Dr. Lampkin heard Hendricks sliding his fingers along the wall for about 20 feet. Then they paused. Hendricks took hold of the knob of a door and opened it soundlessly, and when they had passed through it closed softly into its padded frame.

"Now we are all honky dory," remarked Hendricks. "Stand where you are. I've got to get you into another disguise. They must not recognize us as the two old codgers they saw at Mme. Ringley's—I mean in case a light should be struck. I don't know Kola's plan exactly."

Hendricks stooped and began to feel about on the floor. "Here we are!" he exclaimed presently. "Take off that beard and put on this cambric domino. It will be cooler."

Dr. Lampkin obeyed as well as he could in the darkness.

"Where in thunder are we?" he asked as he took off his false beard and handed it to his friend.

"In the room Kola has arranged for the manifestation. Have you got the rig on? Can you find the eye holes?"

"I'm all right and a great deal more comfortable," replied the doctor.

"Sit down here," said Hendricks. "I have picked out this place for you. You can witness not only the show, but can see the spectators. Sit! I hear something. It was a key in the door."

Lampkin heard Hendricks' feet sliding on the thick carpet as he glided away in the darkness. Then the rear of the city sounded through the house, and he knew the front door was open.

"Come in. You have nothing to fear," sounded the strange accent of the adept.

"You are perfectly safe here."

"By Jove!" drawled Montcastle. "Do you expect us to go into a house as dark as a cavern with a man we never saw before?"

"You may stay out if you like," answered the adept. "It is not for me to urge. The revelation is only for you. My master sent for you. I was to know you by—but I need not tell you that."

"Of course we will go, now we have gone so far as this," spoke up Elanwood. "I am not afraid. Are you, Benton?"

"No," replied Ralph's voice. "I—I was only thinking that the ladies"—

"There will be a light presently," said Kola, still in his placid monotone. "But you must decide now what you are going to do. Every minute lessens your chances of getting a strong psychic revelation."

"Come on," said Ralph. "We are ready. Dispose of us."

"I think, perhaps," began the weak voice of Allen, but the closing door interrupted it. The next minute Lampkin heard them entering the room, as was in and the adept giving them seats.

"Now be perfectly quiet. Speak under no circumstances," said the adept impressively. Then he raised his voice and asked:

"Is the master here?"

"He sleeps, but awaits an awakening," sounded a deep, solemn voice in the distance.

"Tell him the people holding the eternal sign of death are in the audience chamber in accordance with his desire."

"Oh, brother!" began Miss Denton, but the adept leaned forward and interrupted her.

"Be quiet. You will spoil it all," he whispered.

From somewhere in the rear came a soft, mellow sound like one of the lower notes of a flute.

"It is the master's signal. He is awake," said Kola impressively. Then the house was as quiet as a tomb. A train passed on the elevated road nearby. It rumbled in a far off way, as if it were underground.

"Be still now and look into the darkness ahead of you," said Kola. "The master will not present himself to view nor speak, but he knows your desires and will give a psychic demonstration that will interest you."

When the adept ceased speaking, the flute like note sounded again, and then profound silence fell. Lampkin heard some one breathing heavily, but could not make out who it was. He felt a hand grasp his own, heard a step on the carpet and knew that Hendricks had passed him, going he knew not whither. The black robe he wore blended so thoroughly with the darkness that he had become a part of it.

The doctor heard Miss Denton cry out softly, and then he saw a square of grayish light appear in the ceiling. It grew lighter till it was exactly like a glimpse of the sky on a dark night. Now and then a star could be seen under thin, filmy clouds, which seemed to be driven along by a high wind.

"Wonderful, by Jove!" exclaimed Montcastle's voice. "I have"—

Instantly the scene vanished. Only the most intense darkness remained. Kola bent toward Montcastle.

"It was because you spoke, kind sir," he said. "If you talk, the master will retire."

Silence and blackness reigned for five minutes. Then the flute note sounded, and the view of the sky returned. For awhile it was as it had been before. Then one of the stars, which had appeared so indistinct as to be unseen at times, began to blaze fiercely. Now and then it would seem to have some sort of internal eruption.

It would turn red and blue and throw off bits of fire, which floated downward and slowly expired. One of the sparks, instead of going out, grew brighter and brighter as it descended till it took the form of a letter "B" and then melted away. The next spark formed the letter "E," and the letters of fire continued to form and fall till the word "Benton" had been spelled.

The last letter went out with a bright flash, giving Lampkin a vague view of the large room and the Benton party about 20 feet in front of him. The next instant the room was totally dark. It remained so for two or three minutes. Then the flute note sounded again, and a large square of light appeared ahead of them. It looked as if it were half a mile from where the spectators sat. Slowly it began to take the form of the interior of a room. The walls, pictures and curtains came into view, and then the furniture, a desk, a man sitting at it.

Alice Benton stifled a scream. It was her father. He sat writing. He leaned forward and dipped his pen in the inkstand. The spectators saw the movement of his hand over the paper and heard the scratching of his pen. He turned his head, looked at them and then rose deliberately, laid his left hand on his breast and pointed steadily at them. His lips moved, but no sound passed through them. Then Dr. Lampkin heard some one gasping for breath and a heavy weight fall to the floor. Instantly the room was dark.

"A light!" cried Ralph Benton's voice. "Turn on the lights! Something has happened to Mr. Allen."

"What has happened?" asked the adept from the darkness.

"Mr. Allen has fainted," replied Ralph. "He was not well and did not want to come here anyway. Why don't you turn on the lights?"

Dr. Lampkin felt some one touch his elbow and the warm breath of the detective on his ear.

"Remain where you are," whispered Hendricks. "Blast his ugly picture!"

"Give us a light, I say!" cried Ralph angrily.

"See, he—your Mr. Allen is waking," said the adept.

"Waking?" sneered Benton. "Do you think that's the way he usually retires?"

The darkness was lifted slightly. How it was Kola Lampkin could not tell. Montcastle and Ralph could be seen standing and supporting Allen between them.

"The door is open," said Kola. "You'd better all go out into the fresh air."

Montcastle and Allen were groping toward the door, led by the adept. Suddenly Ralph, who had not moved, raised his voice:

"I don't intend to leave till I know what this infernal business means. I say, Montcastle, give me a match!"
